Lecture On "Eating & Drinking Customs During The Civil War" Presented At West Caldwell Public Library

WEST CALDWELL, NJ – As part of Read Across West Caldwell, the West Caldwell Public Library, 30 Clinton Road, will present a lecture titled "Eating and Drinking Customs during the Civil War" featuring food historian Judith Krall-Russo on Tuesday, October 11 at 6:30 pm in the Community

Room. This program will be sponsored by Bob and Janet Markman.

The Civil War made many harsh demands on both food and everyday essentials. As the war progressed, food items such as coffee, tea and wheat became scarce. Learn what substitutes soldiers and civilians used to meet everyday needs and sample some staples from this era. You will also learn about the advantages the North had over the South with regard to 19th century agriculture and industrial practices and how the War ushered in a new era of food processing, transportation and social attitudes.

Ms. Krall-Russo is a member of the Culinary Historians of New York, the New Jersey Museum of Agriculture, and Slow Food USA. She is a certified tea specialist having graduated from the Tea School in Pomfret, CT. She is also certified level 1 and 2 by the Specialty Tea Institute in New York City and is a member of the Tea Association of America. She has an MBA in Marketing from Pace University, a BA from Montclair State University, and an AAS from the Fashion Institute of Technology. Ms. Krall-Russo has given lectures at colleges, museums, historic villages, women's clubs, garden clubs, and libraries throughout NJ.

This program is free and open to the public, but advance registration is required. To sign-up, call the Library at 973-226-5441.

flashbacks, in an attempt to answer the story's central question: why did two sons from a not overly dysfunctional family commit matricide? While there are clues, such as the traumatized Iraq-war veteran father, the mother on the brink of a loss of authority over her children, and Artur's growing delusion of his extraordinary powers, the links between them are too loose and they don't leave us with a coherent interpretation, or possibilities of interpretations, of the tragedy. The movie is Pawel Sala's debut as director and screenwriter, and it feels like a draft rather than a fully developed story. With glimpses of insight, such as the sobering scenes in which the siblings play video games, their faces filled with absolute delight, it lacks focus and fails to deliver on its promise to find meaning in the cause-and-effect in question.

churches — and left them with nothing. When the wave of Pollack jokes took over the airwaves, not only in the U.S. but globally with the spread of American culture, not a single voice of protest or concern was heard from any of the "justice and peace" offices that have proliferated in the post-Vatican II Catholic landscape, and none from any Church leaders of which I am aware.

Enter the Anglicans. Here is a group that has been an enemy of the Roman Catholic Church for five centuries. Most notably, in Ireland, it was the religious arm of an imperial government intent on crushing the Irish nation and their Catholic faith. In America the Episcopal Church was always seen as the church of the rich and powerful. In Britain it was the repository of the pride of the world's premier Protestant nation. The "Protestant Episcopal" church was a cultural creation that combined the rejection of obedience to Peter — and of identification with Catholic nations, which were seen as inferior — with a stylish adoption of "Romish" traditions and customs. In some deep sense, no doubt, at its best the ancient Catholic spirit of England did find a place in this church. There is no doubt too that a treasure of religious culture has been preserved in this tradition, which will enrich the Catholic communion. The language alone, let alone the architecture and music, is a treasure.

But it is a shame — a profound shame — that the Mother Church in the U.S. has let languish and die the religious heritage of a people who were faithful to her from their baptism; a people who followed her teachings on the practice of usury and remained poor when other nations abandoned the Catholic vision and became rich; a Catholic nation that suffered the loss of everything and was itself enslaved but which learned to fight for its own freedom and the freedom of others; a Catholic people who, poorest of the poor in terms of political power, tried to give the greatest glory to God in the monuments they built and who were never accepted, who were despised, and in the end, destroyed and discarded as a Catholic presence in the New World, while an often ideological bureaucracy fed the Church with the slogans and agendas of rich and powerful elites. St. Ignatius taught that "poverty has always been the bulwark of true religion." Perhaps Bl. John Paul II was sent from what was a poor European country to remind us of that.

In our present situation — spiritually speaking — with our often banal liturgical life, with the great decline of religious orders and indeed of spirituality itself, I welcome our Anglican brethren who we hope will bring us something of beautiful religious culture and dignity. But I welcome them to a Church which, to her shame, appears at times to welcome the rich and powerful — and politically astute — while despising her simple children in the Roman tradition.
